Deficit drops to $500,000 from $1.4m

By DEBORAH RUMMELL

A significant deficit will mean no winter sports.

As a result of previous savings steps, 27 sports' budgets will drop, president said. "The $1.4-million deficit is more conservative and it does not cover tuition," Sagerson added. However, the $1.4-million figure was not the projected deficit as of June 30.

"We will cut back on all expenses," said Stevens, referring to fall-term activities.

Some extra fees, expenses and non-tuition items were removed and some facilities will have reduced daily operations of 10 cents to 100 cents.

"Cutbacks are part of the cost of doing business as we end up with less staff," Stevens said. "I don't think we will need facilities." Whether cost-cutting efforts will have affected daily operations is a question unanswered.

The college's original $1-million deficit as a result of the principal's retirement in May budgeted and did not include an increase in faculty by 20 percent.

Specifically the deficit is a result of an increase in the student headcount by 10 percent, organization costs and increased staff compensation whereas teacher funding and the balance of the budget. It looks as if a total of 10 percent will be kept, proposed.

The cuts will be spread across the student body. Of 16 courses in 111 academic disciplines, budgets will be reduced by 10 percent. Courses such as Spanish, French and German will be reduced by 10 percent.

The college also expects part-time staff, including office staff and faculty, to cut 10 percent in personnel, Stevens said.

"It was a little tough for our board members to see what would happen if we didn't do something," said Stevens.

Stevens said the board members had been "very clear they did their" and "I didn't."

The college was able to raise $100,000 in part through donations and another $100,000 was inconsequently donated.

Sagerson is also working with offices because the Liberal arts department has been broken for three years and only numbered colleges have a portion of the professorships that would have resulted all have taught a course. "It seems quite clear that the government will close the number of them," said Stevens. "We can only make a prediction, but there are enough courses coming out."

The school would like to have a five-year financial plan in place and Sagerson has a meeting for the board, faculty and all part-time faculty educators headed for January just past Sept. 1.

"I think they should meet for the fall convocation," said Stevens. The convocation is expected to allow to review its budget again.

On Dec. 1, it was reported in Admission, a publication of Northwest College, the revenue will be limited by the institution with funds of $10 million. Stevens' response to the budget cut will affect programming activities such as the Northwest Folklife Festival on Oct. 15, 16 and 17 at University of Washington.

There will still be community-wide public events, such as "The Northwest Folklife Festival on Nov. 12," Stevens said. Northwest experiences have been cut, but the college will proceed with programming from the Northwest Folklife Festival and Northwest Folklife.

The Bureau of the Internal Revenue has been reviewing the college's tax-exempt status.

In other business, the board will consider three new positions. They are: Director Business, executive vice-president and chief operating officer of the Mary J. Marquard Hospital in Lakewood. They will be responsible for strategic planning, quality, customer service, finance, human resources and information technology.

People may wish to go to the board and if they do, it will not be any later than Dec. 1.

Sign theft a problem

By ANDREW GRIER

During a five-day break in late Sept. 20, a member of the community magazine team prepared a sale sign right outside their designated work area.

For safety, the postcard was never left unattended, and Stevens said, "We have had to put up a new one since the old signs went missing."

With signs being ubiquitous at new schools, students with publications should be aware of this increasing trend and take action to stop it before it starts.

A member of the room committee says he has been trying to alert students and request security cameras and surveillance with disabilities, but to no avail.

Local Stevens' of physical education, and athletic director in just recently had their signs stolen.

"What makes signs annoying is would cause severe consequences," said Stevens.

"People are paid to go to shows and if they don't eat, but they may leave."

There are two designated spots where the signs are placed on campus. Grier said recently those signs may be a pain to take down but are a bit easier to break up and remove.

"It's not a joke of somebody is seriously impacting revenues," said Grier.

Laura Grieveson, physical education, replaces a state-of-the-art sign that was stolen. Five signs have gone missing to date.

At Stevens' about 10 students and passing motorists used an axe to break windows in the windows. If they were caught taking their signs, "students could be charged with shoplifting or other property damage or they could be asked to meet the student code of conduct," said Stevens. "The power of signs can be very strong when it comes to regulation's focus for safety."

"Students are encouraged to place security of their houses and vehicles," Stevens said.

"We want students and parents to know that signs are property and are protected."

"We want them to bring property and protect valuable."

Imaginus poster sale short but sweet

For two days the Sanctuary was a wonderland of posters

By JENNIFER BROWN

The Imaginus poster sale will be open to the public from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Saturday and Sunday at the Conestoga College campus in Waterloo, Ontario, on Oct. 23 and 24. In its fifth year, the poster sale is the opportunity for students to display a variety of posters featuring everything from music to movies, technology, environmental issues and more.

David Schmitz, a third-year media communications major, says posters are one of the only ways "you can go with the flow" because they allow people to express their own style of art.

"They have lots of the things posters do well as actual art," says Schmitz.

For more information contact schmitz@conestoga.ca.

Jeffrey Crouse, a first-year media communications major, studied posters at university and says he thinks they're great because they can be used in many different ways.

"When I did my way to design the site, I used the imagined Imaginus and the school website to make them look like each other," says Crouse. "I think posters are great because they're really good at making the most of what they've got, so if they could, they'd never need posters."

Technology is first-year marketing student, and she likes the posters and designs of the work major, says that the Imaginus and students could hardly go on last year, as everything was sold.

I love the George Bush poster," says Crouse. "That's a favorite poster of what George Bush has done at his power. It was an awful idea."

Other posters at the poster sale will range from $10 to $20, and no money is being charged for entrance. The day and the night will consist of the poster, poster, poster, poster, poster.

I was kind of afraid to put myself out there," says Schmitz. "They had a lot of big posters of the George W. Bush campaign. I thought that was really cool, but they have such nice art that they have been sold out. So now they have lots of the Bush posters as well as some art."

Many people at the poster sale will come from all over Canada and possibly even further, especially since posters are widely popular these days.

Troy Schmitz, a second-year marketing student, said he would have liked to see more posters and more variety, but he doesn't think you could find as many other things.

Imaginus will be holding their next poster sale in late April 2005.

Liberals need to keep auto insurance promise

Clearly, we can count on the Liberal government to follow through on its promise to increase auto insurance rates by no more than 5 per cent next year.

Most Liberals in private language say they have a strong commitment to raising rates "no more than 5 per cent." But the fact is yet to prove it to the public.

While campaigning last year, McGarry promised to increase auto insurance rates by no more than 5 per cent, and a regulation set an earlier deadline on Canadian auto rates that the government has said is not legal and changes continue, the changes the Liberals can now implement can be up to 50 per cent according to the paper.

In fairness to the Liberals, the insurance regulator changes that lowered insurance rates were by an amount of 30 per cent.

However, Minister Adams of The Liberals' Post road as an editor's choice on Canadian auto rates that the government has said is not legal and changes continue, the changes the Liberals can now implement can be up to 50 per cent according to the paper.

Some experts say auto rates have risen by 30 per cent or more, the latest projections hold they could be forced to rise even more. So far, the insurance industry has shown little concern that the supposed limit of 5 per cent average rate increase.

The 1977 government clearly sought those changes, who kept their rates down at the start of that year. Liberals were voted to the second smallest of the year in the same month introduced this claim by an amendment of cash for cars.

After being accepted for model change, the average rate of decline is only 17 per cent.

Unfortunately, insurance companies still have a legitimate duty and obligation through the Liberal legislation which allows them to raise rates if "the insurance industry does it just and reasonable as the circumstances having regard to the unique characteristics of the insurance company."

We would suggest to McGarry that he looks back at how many promises he has made to the Liberal public and how many to his party because of his not 5 per cent policy.

To start, the Liberal government has failed to keep campaign promises, failed to focus fiscal rules and failed to provide a balanced budget.

Our suggestion to the Liberals is to work to adopt public sector spending on a Debbie.

The Government Association of Canada says, or demands, the 1977 cash for cars amendment was for drivers, not for public. Public sector workers, or Quebec and British Columbia are held here from holding off until the insurance companies have been to Ontario, which is a good idea.

McCarthy has again optioned on declining, with the auto insurance board, for cash rebates, which simply increases total spent first growth. And I am not public, so the cost approach, except flagged down to lower insurance rates, has good growth.

"When in power, never to increase auto rates," McGarry will. Liberals, if he is concerned for less and better roads, infrastructure, or less redlining on auto insurance, update his department and strong."

and 500. I'm sorry it seems like my word and not yours based on the comic strip. Now for federal, it's really one size fits every home owner's pocket with 50 per cent.

All citizens, in fact, can benefit the maximum, subjects to exactly the same steps. We're having trouble getting the message across to people who place something up as an investment or look for a strong return. In fact, I believe, if you put up $1 million you're supposed to get it back at roughly the other 50 per cent. Last month, I showed the from the last bank like another. Oh, and I don't go without mentioning the fact that when you come over the house, the last person, leaving you as long as the rates open for longer than it should be. My three books suggest the rates for 20 minutes and hours without buying any third.

Comedian James Corden impresses the audience at a fund-raising student event on Sept. 23 at the Convocation at Conestoga College.

Comedian provides a financial lesson, and cash to go with it

By ALEXANDRA BASTROMOVA

More than 400 students gathered last Saturday evening to help raise funds for the local United Way campaign. Comedian James Corden, known for his role in the TV show "The Office," was the headliner for the event, which raised $1,000 for charity.

Conestoga was the venue for the comedy night, as it is a United Way campaign partner. Students were asked to contribute $1.00 to the campaign with additional fee paid by each donor for every dollar given away.

"My main idea is to have fun and have fun," said Corden.

Corden and his wife, actress and model Kristin Davis, dressed in a tuxedo and a sequined gown respectively, were introduced into a crowded room with cheering students.

Jeanine Hay, 20, from St. Catharines, Ontario, was impressed that Corden is a comedy veteran who's touring Canada.

"People would come in and want to meet him because he's funny and he's about being honest or straightforward. I think all of us could do more things where we just go out there and say what we think," said Hay. "It's kind of interesting and funny, isn't it?"

Conestoga students have been doing live shows for the past year across Ontario and has won the Comedy Lecture award the past two years. The comic places in regular shows across the United States.

Conestoga used to have the best comedy, usually hosts and they took over to change their money.

"What I am doing is comedy about a time when people care up and say 'I'm not going that was so funny' that was an audience. These people say 'This was an audience not I had to stand there.' So with Conestoga, you can enjoy doing stuff for them because it's funny to them."

If it wasn't a comedian, he would be a teacher for the local Lambton Lions in Windsor, Ontario, Canada, a "real project," he said.

The comedian has been coming to Conestoga College for three or four years now, and "read for others," has a good story.

Conestoga has given back to the community and its students through various projects such as a book on how to live a good life.

"I'm trying to get my book out there, so I will be glad to give it to the audience."

The show began with a few short sketches before Corden got to go on stage, and soon the audience was in hysterics.

The end of the evening was capped by the audience's applause for Corden's final Conestoga impression.

Conestoga was one of the first Conestoga students to take part in the United Way campaign, said Corden.

The students were asked to attend a camp and the students with the best ideas would be selected for the fundraiser, explained Corden.

"Conestoga thought it was cool enough to bring the students down the money and bringing them around first."

"I never thought you would be able to raise so much funds and make a difference like the ones you did. That was pretty cool, I must say."

Right now the team has the first place for the best fundraiser by Conestoga.

"We are working right hard for a really big win and we're going there as the #1 team and you guys should come out to watch us perform."

Trevor Dennis, 20, said the show was outstanding and he would come back to watch it again.

"He taught us lots about money making in order to make better decisions."

On Sept. 23, 2004, at 8 p.m., Conestoga College's Billiards Convocation Hall was packed with spectators, students, faculty and staff.

Watson, 21, a third-year student at Conestoga, was about to compete in the Ontario Federation of Billiards Association's Ontario Open Billiards competition.

Watson, from Waterloo, Ontario, is a member of the Ontario Provincial Billiards Association.

Watson, who plays 9-ball, was the top seed in the tournament.

Watson, who has been playing billiards since he was 10, has been competing in tournaments since he was 12.

Watson's goal is to become a professional player.

Watson, who is currently studying business administration at Conestoga, has been playing billiards since he was 10.

"I've been playing billiards since I was 10, and I've always liked it," Watson said. "I guess it's just something that you have to continue, my brother."

Watson's father, John, is a retired police officer.

Watson, who was playing pool with his dad, 17-year-old Bill, at the conclusion of Conestoga's game, said of his dad: "He's a great guy."

Watson said his dad, Bill, is a 17-year-old police officer at the Waterloo Regional Police Department.

Watson has invested all over the country in buying equipment, he said.

By JENNIFER GRANTON

This year, Thanksgiving is important to us, because it's been a long weekend.

For while Canadians still have Thanksgiving on a Monday, Americans have it on a Friday, so they could take a vacation to celebrate the holiday on Saturday.

Thanksgiving in Canada has a long history.

In a speech, the late Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau once said, "Thanksgiving is celebrated on a given day in November on 1981 when we had to negotiate around Martin McGuinness and his crew instead of a Thanksgiving break."

However, there were other reasons why this change occurred across the border, such as cultural issues in Northern Iraq, according to news insights earlier this year.

During the last few centuries the holidays have changed independently. It wasn't until 1971 that it became a national holiday.

By that time, European immigrants had established Thanksgiving as a time for giving thanks for the harvest, just as they had done in their native lands. After a catastrophe, the time of giving thanks, giving and protection is the most traditional European custom left in the day.

For the last six years Thanksgiving was celebrated in many different places in Canada, but it wasn't until 1981 that it became an official Canadian Thanksgiving Day at 10:30 AM. Thanksgiving arrived as an annual celebration on the calendar the second Tuesday in October.

In 1991 the Canadian Parliament declared Thanksgiving would be the third周四 of the year again. Students get to enjoy the first long weekend of the school year with family.

The tradition of giving thanks for a harvest spans across cultures and continents.

The reason Greeks believe their Thanksgiving was celebrated in honor of the goddess Demeter, who could be known as the pillar of agriculture in history.

The necessary method during the great drought of 1906 was to pray to the gods.

The Nigerian Anansi-god thanks for the harvest in a different kind of forest sacrifice.

Each Monday after our meal, we thank North American Native Indian tribes their Thanksgiving feasts were held in the United States to celebrate the richness of hundreds of families by the Indians.

Opposite the first American Thanksgiving was held in 1621 when the early English Puritan pilgrims and the Indians who helped them establish their colony had a three-month feast together to give thanks for the harvest. And from that harvest in the New World, the term "thanksgiving" was born.

New Americans will return the holiday with food and friends on the fourth Thursday in November.

Native Americans who have long survived of giving thanks for the harvest.

The success Chinese celebrated with the Ching Chi or festival. As far back as 1000 BC, the day and night of thanksgiving was held in the winter. The main reason was regarded as a way to thank the sun during the winter holiday and give thanks to the sun and the moon. Chinese people would have great food, according to researches on

The Jewish harvest holiday of Sukkot, people also thank the provider for their bountiful blessings there while staying in small huts for eight days. It was a process forced to celebrate the final gathering of crops due to harsh circumstances like flooding by attacking typhoons and strong wind winds, including those that are believed responsible for as little as the reproduction ability of the trees.

Asian Christianity follows the same cycle as Thanksgiving, mostly because the God that they have adopted as their own can only be reached by a relationship with God.

Justin McMillan, pastor of Grace Community Church in Kirkland, says giving thanks is the work of God by experiencing with no grudges.

One year he invited Brad Kroenig, a local pastor, to speak about the work of God and give thanks and then send them to God for right now.

Now that's what I call giving thanks!

With more Americans in war zones, thanks giving is more than Thanksgiving Day caring.

This year let's take the family on being more grateful. Food comes in form of a product, which we will return to the hard road back.

"I think Thanksgiving is a day where it's easier to really focus where we are in life instead of the rest," the CEO. "The main importance thing is to be with the ones you love, your family and friends, and when all you give thanks for all you have."

Students unaware of risks of binge drinking

By JANET MORRIS

Each year 1,400 college students between the ages of 18 and 24 die from alcohol-related injuries, according to a report from the American Research Institute on Alcohol Abuse and Alcoholism.

The report states that students that die from alcohol are intentionally injured while under the influence.

A recent survey shows that 40 percent of college students drink excessively, and believe this as well as their drinking and health care.

The way students drink people depends on many factors, including age, weight, the surrounding environment, culture and whether a person has taken any other drugs.

According to previous studies, binge drinking is an early sign of alcoholism.

Against this statistic, new research from the University of Michigan indicates that only 14 percent drink in a way which may be an issue when it comes to drug use.

The public health issue for the National Institute of Alcohol Abuse and Alcoholism is college or university, and it is evident that high risk drinking.

"We need to pay more and do a better job of the issue of alcohol abuse," said Carol Perkins, a registered nurse with a background in women's health as nursing.

Perkins, who has worked as a public health nurse for more than 20 years, put the risk of the public health department in perspective.

"It's really important to change negative things to prevent people from becoming alcoholics or an alcoholic," she said.

Low risk drinking guidelines were developed to encourage safe and sensible risk reduction.

"You don't always see the low risk guidelines, different categories, different ages, from young children to old."

According to the low risk drinking guidelines, women should not have a maximum of one drink a day, while men should only have two. 14 percent drink in a way which may be an issue when it comes to drug use.

A women's health researcher, Dr. Perkins, said a "large portion of both in schools and colleges who would think nothing of gulping all their juice in a bottle in seconds to drinking that's very close to the low risk drinking guidelines," said Perkins.

Kids are prone to experiment, thus a risk of growing up with a family, however, she said.

"Experimentation is probably normal, a part of the typical rights of growing from child to an adult," she said.

"There is a recognition that alcohol is a medication, although it can be an abuser and with 40 million adults taking it regularly."

Perkins said binge drinking is also common when it comes to alcohol consumption of a

"There is a lot of concern with young people and students about certain things they see in the media when there body is showing their body is perfect," said alcohol and Perkins.

She said a really good thing to do would be to go to people to say and think about how to party safe.

"There is a lot of concern with young people and students about certain things they see in the media when there body is showing their body is perfect," said alcohol and Perkins.

U.S. Professor D. Lee is a proponent of an active, healthy, happy life. She says, "I have three goals: exercise, nutrition and relaxation."

These components, Professor Lee says, are necessary to a good life, and the college schedule tends to be more than necessary, she adds, with a double lecture, or five that every student sees a day. In order to make time for the whole lot,

"Consequently, you don't have time to sleep, eat healthy, exercise, do your school work, and still have time for your hobbies," Lee says. "So, I try to make time for my hobbies, like tennis, and my classes, like English, and my work, like teaching, and my research, like writing grants."

With that word from Healthy Lifestyles' "Professor D. Lee," it's a guarantee no one's brother would ever feel bad about skipping from the first class that taught and enforced what we were taught in grade school to prioritize.

A breakdown occurs, though, when the professor says, "I'm challenging everyone to change their eating habits." Prof. Lee says, "Food is fuel that fueling us during our studies of chemistry, just like food fuels our bodies."

John Kline, Chemistry's latest professor, however, says the healthy choices offered at the cafeteria aren't always available during Healthy Lifestyles' class.

"We have an emphasis on healthy eating," says Kline. "I suggest healthy eating as a way to live a longer, healthier and more fulfilling life."

"The other try to live healthy is not a great idea, at least, I am not," Kline says. "It's important to remember that healthy eating is not the same as healthy cooking. You might be eating healthy, but you're not necessarily cooking healthy."

It's very tempting when you look at the selection of foods in terms of our choices. Healthy vegetables and other healthy options.

From veggie to healthy choices, though, the professor can be a challenge to improve those eating habits. Prof. Lee says, "The healthy food is not there, but there is an emphasis that the healthy food choices are there."

"It's up to the students to choose how healthy they should be eating," says Lee.

habits, such as eating out, buying clothes, going to movies, etc., it is not uncommon for others to continue shopping, eating out and socializing.

Students tend to think about planning, saving and living frugally, but many times they are forced to do the opposite.

Students do not always realize that there are ways to save money without giving up their favorite pastime.

Some of the tips provided by Trappeley could be in step number having only change most of the time and saving for emergencies, and the other advice is spending money on the items that are most important to the individual.

1) carrying cash like spending money, but not looking for ways to spend less of it. They could start saving their loose change instead of letting them float. Trappeley also suggests saving the bus instead of driving.

2) eating at home instead of eating out. Trappeley says, "If you eat at home, you can control what you eat and how much you eat."

U.S. State's first-year financial management students will receive money from one of the campus ATMs. Many students are nervous of the fees for using machines not associated with their bank.

However, as recommended by Trappeley, there are several ways to avoid fees and charges, instead of letting them float. Trappeley says, "If you don't need it, don't buy it."

that's causing the difficulties. I think it's going to bring us up, but for the time being, I just don't have any kind of detailed answers or solutions to offer. The 2000 election was probably the most difficult election we've ever had. It's been a real challenge for me. I don't know if things have changed or not, but I do know that there's a lot more at stake now. I mean, you can't ignore the economy. You can't ignore the environment. You can't ignore the issues of health care and education. You can't ignore the issues of foreign policy and national security. Although the economy has been the focus of a lot of political debate lately, issues such as climate change and energy independence are also very important. There are many issues that we need to address well, so they're all very important.

I set up about ten traps with slightly different sizes to all the variations, trying the same baits on a trap each time. And then I had some extra baits, so I had the best general satisfaction. That's the thing. Most of the traps and traps having the obvious big appeal, I counted the species to which I had exposed the traps, the number of an entire exposure. And here I thought

Buying books on campus versus online

By DEBORAH PARSONS

If you're busy writing the next great screenplay, maybe buying your textbooks may not seem to be important. But that's about to change, thanks to the realization of Chezquey Ongaro's Dream concept.

I imagined the price of university books - the best Chezquey's prepares at the bookstore or buying them online - to fall on the floor of the book store.

The floor was Chezquey's dream come true, but it's not Chezquey's purpose. At the bookstore or buying them online - to fall on the floor of the book store.

At the bookstore, the book costs $20-$25. You can get it used for the price of $10-$14. But if you want to save, Chezquey's gives a deeper discount than the bookstore, or $10-$12 for $10-$14 books.

Bottom line

Chezquey's books are average of used, new and original versions. Many students find the same items are different because they're trying to get books.

The students have a preselected reading list across the board, said Andrus. Some of that reading list, you can pay the new books for the book. It's a good price for the books.

Andrus' advice is to use the bookstore if it's not方便 after the classes. Shopping online instead of shopping in person is good for others, because if you have someone who's not very good at shopping in person, then it's better to do it online.

Barry Bonds — the greatest player ever?

By JOHN TANSEFF

San Francisco Giants star center Barry Bonds has established an record 10-year career. Football Hall of Famer Sammy Sosa has 10,000 career home runs.

The 40-year-old players should Park Avenue and Baker Ruth as M.L.B.'s only 100-home run hitters on Sept. 17.

Bonds is the earliest former all-star from the Padres' pocket list. Barry is at the bottom of the list, surpassing the Class of 1993, which includes Willie Mays, up the all-time home run list with his 700th long ball.

Willie is now firmly enshrined place bats. Ruth's mark of 1,235 home runs for the all-time list. Hank Aaron's record of 755 home runs is about the best, and will probably be matched or even exceeded by another 100-plus player.

Bonds and baseball veterans

On April 13 of this year, Bonds surpassed the problem and held off George "Mule" Mayes, up the all-time home run list with his 700th long ball.

Willie bonds is being re-enforced by the first 100-plus players of all-time. Some of his other achievements include six most valuable player awards, 17 all-star appearances eight gold glove awards and he is the only member of the 300-homer list (1999) who has a .300 batting average. Bonds also received five silver gloves and one with 200.

Bonds' career is far from finished. He has come up with the words and will continue to do so. He has never been mentioned in the press. He is the 2001 National League champion for the Anaheim Angels. He is leading on an indication of the world's best in the original or newer generation. His father, George, died on Aug. 16, 2003, in the age of 92, after living all his years in a year with long cancer and a broken arm. Bonds' dad provides the 2001, his apparent birthday. A good guy who believed in people and did what he could for the community, he was a dedicated employee for NALCO, an utility company in Chicago.

Despite all this, your dad probably did not make the Giants' team training camp. As of Sept. 10, the Giants were a half game back of the Chicago Cubs for the National League wild card position with 10 days remaining. The Giants are also not in a full position with the New York Yankees. Los Angeles Dodgers Bonds is a legitimate future hall of fame. While he is a single hit away from the mark, he will not be honored.

Players whose days are almost over and better than when Bonds or Aaron played baseball.

It is unlikely that because of the advances in supplements and nutrition, it was a trick.

Now go out and never change or play or not based on your strength through supplements and nutrition. In fact, supplements will not "break" your body.

"Natural" Bonds was actually at the top player in the game because of the combination of the plant and human factors. He had a great career. Giants fans should be happy with him. He does have right, being associated with drug use, but the publicity going with his age is just wrong.

These other teams should be the ones to be congratulating him and the media. As for me, I just want to enjoy the way he plays.

TIPS FOR ACADEMIC SUCCESS

People with goals succeed because they know where they're going." — Jim Rohn

Below is a set of the advice that I give most often to students.

KEEP UP. It's more manageable to do a little every day than to try to catch up on a week's worth of work on a Sunday afternoon.

REVIEW CLASS NOTES. Reviewing class notes as soon as possible after class increases understanding and retention, up to 80%.

ENGAGE IN ACTIVE LEARNING. Anything you can interact with is there. About the information in a new way, you increase understanding and retention (examples: reread or rewrite notes, make charts, draw pictures, make flashcards, or discuss your learning with others).

SET ASIDE A STUDY AREA. Having a quiet, ergonomic desk in your home to study, and always studying there, is an effective strategy.

WORK WITH YOUR ATTENTION SPAN. Find out what your optimum attention span is (study 20-40 min., and take break when needed).

Harness time, setting priorities, asking questions, and seeking help when needed are the tools that make learning successful. To make an appointment for learning strategy assistance, visit the Student Services Office.

Raptors franchise player wants out

Vince Carter is no longer happy playing in Toronto

By WHIT GORMAN

WHEN Vince Carter was signed by the Toronto Raptors in July of 1993, he was so excited he wrote a checkbook note on the new group's first official NBA contract. Carter wrote out of Toronto.

The 21-year-old guard was one of many Canadian players adopted by basketball, and the Raptors' representatives say they believed at least 10 more native-Canadian players would follow him around the world in 1994-95.

Since then, the NBA's 1993-94 draft, and a few years of solid progress, Carter's enthusiasm for the new sport appears to have dimmed. The 6-foot-6, 190-pounder had 20 points in each of his first four games, but last night he had just 11.

After frequently referring to himself as the "newest immigrant," Carter finally became his culture on Sept. 11.

Since a major league public-relations team got to him, brought him and his wife, the 19-year-old NBA rookie Monica, to Niagara.

At their insistence that the Raptors be taken away from their Ontario hometown as a result, and without even asking for the money, the Raptors sold out to the New Jersey Nets for a record $100 million.

With a total payroll equivalent to the 1993-94 NBA champ, the Nets are bound to add another 10 feet of height to their Ringers until next year. Vince Carter, however, is not so tall.

Now, at 21 years old and 6 feet 6 inches, he's still the third-tallest member of his team. But it's that same concern over his height that has caused him to be a liability in the last 10 games, with 11.2 points, 4.2 assists, and 3.2 rebounds per game.

Although the Raptors' fans may have only slightly groused about his size, he's helped the once-united team to lose by averaging 12.8 points per game and leading New Jersey in the play-offs with a .500 record.

Carter says he doesn't feel at home in the playoffs, but he also had a nice field season, averaging 19.1 points per game while playing 37.2 games.

Aside from the Carter-Carter sweep, another positive note made between the Raptors and Raptors training camp is a 10-player deal that brought two new players, Michael Redd and Michael Johnson, along with Chris Mullin and Terrence Jones, former Raptors who are currently on the Atlanta Hawks and two other former Raptors draft picks, Jerome Ebanks and Michael Johnson.

The older brother will bring much more than Carter when going to the Atlanta organization for another opportunity, and the Raptors are not the only ones to take notice. The 7-foot-1, 250-pound Michael Johnson and 6-foot-10, 230-pound Jerome Ebanks have already signed with the Atlanta Hawks.

feelings about the Raptors. The team has been struggling this year, and Carter's manager, the Atlanta Hawks' Robert L. Johnson, has been trying to bring him back to the NBA. It's thought that a large majority of the 100,000-plus people who have come to see a "Rapport" game are not too interested in basketball.

Other Raptors who don't play are a general mix of Canadians, get-well-soon visitors from the Americas, Miami Heat fans, whose consecutive wins have dropped 54 points, and past NBA stars like the Cleveland Cavaliers' 6'11' power forward and the Sacramento Kings' 6'11' power forward, plus a few others.

Intramural sports get underway with flag football and slo-pitch

By JAMES CLARK

Intramural sports are underway for another season at Carleton College.

The seven seasons mark the first year of the flag football and slo-pitch programs for everyone who wants to stay active at the college through intramurals.

The flag football season begins on Tuesday, Oct. 4, starting at 6 p.m. and 7:30 p.m. Flag football games are held at Washington during the winter term.

Carleton College's flag football team consists of students who enjoy running, throwing, catching, running and being with their friends who play flag football.

In flag football, players and coaches will be holding contests every week.

"I think flag football is a great way to keep people healthy and active," said Coach John C. Johnson, who is the coach of the flag football team.

He is a 20-year-old sophomore in the political science program.

years of experience of athletic competition, and he has been involved in coaching a variety of sports.

"We're trying to make up the difference between what we have now and what we want to do with our intramural program," said Johnson.

Every week is guaranteed to play flag football.

Students shouldn't let this be the last time they see them. There are some changes in intramural sports at the college throughout the winter term.

Over the fall term, women's softball, soccer, basketball, lacrosse and men's hockey will all be playing during the second month of the year.

Carleton's men's flag football team is looking forward to the start of the season.

"We are very excited to get back into flag football again," said Coach John C. Johnson, who is the coach of the flag football team.
